This volume comprises selections from the WW II writings of two Jewish journalists who lived in the ghetto (Opochinsky in Warsaw, Zelkowicz in Lodz) and wrote for the secret ghetto archives. Both men died in the death camps, but not before documenting the disease, degradation, and starvation in the ghetto in order to bear witness against the Nazis. The title of this volume derives from Zelkowicz’s essay by the same title (and included here), which documents the September 1942 removal and deportation from the Lodz ghetto to the death camps of all children under the age of ten and all adults over 65. The writings of these two men, and of others, were hidden (often buried) in the hope that someone would find them after the war. The writings that appear in this volume, many published previously in various languages, are translated here from the Yiddish. Zelkowicz’s essays appeared in In Those Terrible Days: Writings from the Lodz Ghetto, (2002), and historians may know of him thanks to A Holocaust Reader, ed. by Lucy Dawidowicz (CH, Jul’76), and Truth and Lamentation: Stories and Poems on the Holocaust, ed. by Milton Teichman and Sharon Leder (1994). One hopes this abridged edition will bring Opochinsky and Zelkowicz the attention they deserve.
